When the reformed Protestant religion was formally ratified by law in Scotland in 1560, Knox was appointed minister of the Church of St. Giles, then the great parish church of Edinburgh. He was at this time at the height of his powers. He spent most of his reformation years preaching from the pulpit in the cathedral's Thistle Chapel. A higher testimony to the worth of a man not without faults was pronounced at his grave in the churchyard of St. Giles by the Earl of Mortoun, the regent of Scotland, in the presence of an immense funeral procession, who had followed the body to its last resting-place: "Here lyeth a man who in his life never feared the face of man, who hath been often threatened with dagger, but yet hath ended his days in peace and honor."

Fort William lies on the shore of Loch Linnhe in the shadow of Britain's highest mountain, Ben Nevis. The fort referred to in the town name was built by William of Orange in the middle of the 17th century but it was demolished in 1890 to make way for the new railroad line. Local people find employment in the aluminum works, a paper factory, the Ben Nevis distillery (founded in 1825 by John MacDonald but now owned by the Japanese firm, Nikka Distillers) and, increasingly, tourism

Now under the administration of the National Trust for Scotland (1979), the island was a Druid shrine long before St Columba landed there in 563. Known originally as "Hy", then "Iona insula", the monastery that St. Columba and his 12 companions founded on Iona served as their base as they sought to convert Scotland to Christianity. The monastery on Iona was destroyed on more than one occasion by Vikings, but it was always rebuilt. The chancel and parts of the 13th century Norman chapel are still intact. Many Scottish kings and chiefs, including Macbeth, were buried in Iona
